 Contents: Architecture as the primary energy device, by V. Loftness and B. Reeder. Direct gain: a low profile solar house on the California coast. Stepped-down skylight that acts as a collector. Beyond residential scale: Aspen's solar airport. House designed around a solar heated atrium. Indirect gain: heat from a glass facade stored in a wall behind. Gravel-filled storage wall beneath an arched roof. Storage mass of wine bottles filled with water. Barrels of water linked to act as a storage wall. Water bags on a metal roof deck act as a storage "pond". Isolated gain: south-facing atrium functions as sunspace and wind scoop. "Thermosiphoning" creates continuous natural air flow
